

“GREATER IS HE THAN MAN CAN KNOW”:
DIVINE REPENTANCE AND A BRIEF INQUIRY INTO ANTHROPOMORPHISM & ANTHROPOPATHISM,
IMPASSIBILITY & AFFECTABILITY

by

Layton Talbert

Presented at the
Bob Jones Seminary Theological Symposium
November 12, 2018

© Layton Talbert

“GREATER IS HE THAN MAN CAN KNOW”: DIVINE REPENTANCE AND A BRIEF INQUIRY INTO ANTHROPOMORPHISM & ANTHROPOPATHISM, IMPASSIBILITY & AFFECTABILITY<sup>1</sup>

The above title incorporates an acknowledged absurdity. That I am even endeavoring a “brief inquiry” into profoundly complex issues<sup>2</sup> that have been deliberated for centuries by the greatest minds of the Church may seem either alarmingly arrogant, hopelessly simplistic, or even theologically dangerous. I hope it is none of these. It is intended to be an honest attempt to let the biblical data itself shape at least my own theological thought and speech.

Divine repentance furnishes the context in which these larger issues will be explored. Does God ever “repent” or not? Our immediate, instinctive answer might be “no”—perhaps because of a couple of well-known, dogmatic, scriptural statements to that effect (Num 23:19; 1 Sam 15:29). Surprisingly, however, far more passages state that God does repent than that he does not. Out of 105 occurrences of the Hebrew verb in question,<sup>3</sup> 35 refer to God (33%). Of those, 27 (77%) indicate that God does repent, while only 8 (23%) imply or insist that he does not, only two of which state in any propositional form that God does not repent as a point of principle or divine character.

Of all the texts that address the issue of divine repentance, none illustrates the problem more economically than 1 Samuel 15. This passage displays the difficulty in microcosm because it includes within a single context point-blank assertions that God both does and does not repent.<sup>4</sup>

- <sup>11</sup> It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king ...
- <sup>29</sup> ... the Strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man that he should repent.
- <sup>35</sup> ... and the LORD repented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

How can Scripture sensibly affirm both that God does not, and yet does, repent? Moreover, if “repent” means to change, specifically to change one’s mind, how can God do that if he is affirmed to be changeless or immutable (Mal 3:6)? The following chart summarizes the most immediately relevant textual data regarding divine repentance.

---

<sup>1</sup> The fore-title comes from a choral work titled “Who Can Show Forth All God’s Praise” by Peter Davis.

<sup>2</sup> The complex issues identified in the title bleed, of course, into arguably even more complex issues such as divine aseity and simplicity. (Who would have thought that simplicity could be a complex issue?) For thoughtful analysis of these related issues see John Feinberg, No One Like Him (Wheaton: Crossway, 2001), 325-37; John Frame, The Doctrine of God (Phillipsburg, NJ: Puritan & Reformed, 2002), 225-30, 600-08.

<sup>3</sup> For a brief overview of the senses and translations of נָחַם, see Appendix 1.

<sup>4</sup> The critics’ charge that such contradictions prove the Bible’s human origin and fallibility betrays a fundamental ignorance of human nature (as though the writer himself would not have noticed and removed such an obvious contradiction), and overestimate the originality of their powers of observation.

Passages asserting that God does not repent	Passages asserting that God did/does repent	Brief Description
Pentateuch
	Gen. 6:6,7	God repented that he made man; parallel to "it grieved Him into His heart"; v. 8 = Ex. 32:11-14
	Ex. 32:12,14*	God repents of judgment in answer to prayer
Num. 23:19		God is not a man that he should lie or repent
	Deut. 32:36	God will repent himself on his servants
Historical Books
	Jud. 2:18	it repented the Lord because of their groanings
1 Sam. 15:29 (2x)	1 Sam. 15:11, 35	regarding the kingship of Saul
	2 Sam. 24:16	the Lord repented of the evil saying, "It is enough"
	1 Chr. 21:15	parallel to previous
Poetical Books
	Ps. 90:13	Be sorry for your servants
	Ps. 106:45	God relented of his chastening on his people
Ps. 110:4		Yahweh has sworn and will not repent
	Ps. 135:14	the LORD will judge his people and will repent himself concerning his servants
Prophetic Books
Jer. 4:28		I have purposed and will not repent
	Jer. 15:6	I am weary with repenting
	Jer. 18:7-10	God responds to human responses
Jer. 20:16		let that man be like the cities Which the LORD overthrew, and did not repent
	Jer. 26:3,12-13,18-19	God responds to human responses (note unconditionality of Micah's prophecy v. 18)
	Jer. 42:10	If you will still remain in this land, then I will build you and not pull you down...For I repent concerning the disaster that I have brought upon you
Ezek. 24:14		I, the LORD, have spoken it ...I will do it ; I will not hold back, nor will I spare, nor will I repent
	Joel 2:13,14	God responds to human responses
	Amos 7:1-6*	God repents in answer to prayer
	Jonah 3:9,10; 4:2	God responds to human response
Zech. 8:14		Just as I determined to punish you when your fathers provoked Me to wrath, and I would not repent, so I am determined to do good to Jerusalem

Note: * and ** passages are referenced later in this study.

So does God repent, or not? And if so, what does that mean? How does this impact our understanding and explanation of the nature and character of God? To answer this conundrum we shall be traipsing around the theological barn a time or two before returning to the original question. And rather than state my thesis on the front end like a gentleman and a scholar, I have chosen to withhold it to allow the scriptural data to make its own impressions.<sup>5</sup>

1. COMMON EXPLANATIONS OF GOD'S REPENTANCE

1.1. References to God's "repentance" communicate the emotional nuance of the word, not the volitional nuance. So when God "repents" it means he regrets the way a situation has turned out (though it never surprises him).<sup>6</sup> By contrast, assertions that God does not “repent” employ the volitional orientation of the word, denying that God ever “changes” his mind, his purposes, or his emotions.

<sup>5</sup> Though the paper's fore-title at least gives a hint of the direction this presentation is headed.

Bruce Ware’s excellent case against Open Theism unfortunately incorporates an argument on this point that is less than compelling. He asserts that in 1 Samuel 15 the Hebrew word is to be understood in an alternately “weak sense” (15:11, 35) and “strong sense” (15:29).<sup>7</sup> This solution seems too facile, too conveniently subjective, especially when exactly the same Hebrew word is used within the same context both to deny and to affirm that God does this. A more objective, exegetically anchored solution would be preferable.

1.2. References to God’s repentance are to be understood only in terms of a change of action not a change of mind. God never changes his mind, but he does change his ways. In addressing the apparent discrepancy in 1 Samuel 15, for example, Matthew Henry offered a theologically astute and arresting juxtaposition: God does not change his mind, only his method. He “does not alter His will, but wills an alteration.”

In a way, these are helpful distinctions. But what exactly does it mean? How does it adequately explain, for example, Exodus 32 where God announced that he would destroy Israel and start over with Moses (32:9-10), and then “repented” by reversing his previously stated intention (32:14) in response to Moses’ intercession (32:11-13)? However theologically snug it sounds, Henry’s explanation fails to reflect a meaningful reading of the Hebrew word for “repent.”

1.3. References to God’s repentance are examples of anthropomorphism (or, more technically, anthropopathism). That is, they express God’s response to situations from a strictly human point of view; if it were us responding to the situation, we would call it “repenting” or “changing our mind.”<sup>8</sup> It is a purely human way of expressing God’s posture toward a situation but it does not communicate any actual divine experience or action. But in what way is this helpful, or even meaningful?

Though this is, by far, the preferred classic explanation, it seems, to me at least, unsatisfying, unnecessary, and perhaps even unauthorized. We are, after all, dealing with expressions that go to the heart of God’s nature, character, and behavior. Moreover, the issue is not merely scriptural assertions that God does not do this, but also apparently contradictory, repeated assertions to the

---

<sup>6</sup> For many theologians, as we shall see, even any statement of divine “regret” is fraught with theological impossibility and therefore purely anthropopathic.

<sup>7</sup> Bruce Ware, Their God Is Too Small (Wheaton: Crossway, 2003), 33-34. Scott Oliphint critiques a similar view when he cites “some confusion over the concept of anthropomorphic. It is thought that, for example, when Scripture speaks of God changing his mind, we are to read that anthropomorphically, but that when Scripture says that God [does not] change his mind, we are to read that literally” (God with Us: Divine Condescension and the Attributes of God [Wheaton: Crossway, 2012], 123).

<sup>8</sup> Commenting on Gen 6:6, for example, Calvin says, “The repentance which is here ascribed to God does not properly belong to him, but has reference to our understanding of him. For since we cannot understand him as he is, it is necessary that, for our sakes, he should, in a certain sense, transform himself. . . . The same reasoning, and remark, applies to what follows, that God was affected with grief. . . . This figure, which represents God as transferring to himself what is peculiar to human nature, is called ανθρωποπαθεια.”

contrary that God does do this (under certain circumstances). In fact, the anthropomorphic explanation introduces some larger questions that are the real focus of this presentation.

2. ANTHROPOMORPHISM AS A CATEGORY OF THEOLOGICAL EXPLANATION

On one level, anthropomorphism is a sound and necessary hermeneutic since we know from Scripture itself that God, as spirit, is incorporeal. But the concept of anthropomorphism also raises some additional questions.

2.1. Do anthropomorphisms genuinely advance understandability? Anthropomorphism is commonly explained as the language of accommodation.<sup>9</sup> That is, God speaks to us in ways that we can understand and relate to. But Vern Poythress frankly points out that anthropomorphisms are no more understandable than non-metaphors.

Consider an example. Exodus 15:6 says, “Your right hand, O Lord, shatters the enemy.” The stock explanation using accommodation would say that this description of God is an accommodation to human capacity, through anthropomorphism. Yes, it is an anthropomorphism. But does this verse really have much to do with the concept of accommodation? . . .

Similar truths could have been expressed in other ways, without the use of vivid metaphors. For example, as an alternative we could say, “The Lord exercises his power to defeat the enemy utterly.” That way of saying it is not colorful, not poetic, not rhetorically engaging. But it says some of the same things that the poetic expression does. Thus, the Lord could have spoken in an alternative way without using vivid anthropomorphisms. But he did not. Why not? The doctrine of accommodation, by itself, says only that God addresses human beings according to their capacity. Both metaphorical and nonmetaphorical forms of expression meet this criterion. Indeed, anything that is intelligible human language meets the criterion! Accommodation says only that Scripture is intelligible. It does not explain why the Lord in one text chooses one particular kind of intelligible speech in contrast to many other alternatives. Thus, accommodation does not really explain anthropomorphism or any of the particulars.<sup>10</sup>

In other words, it’s not as if we need anthropomorphic language in order to understand God better. Accommodation itself is a weak explanation for anthropomorphism.<sup>11</sup>

2.2. How do we know how to define the nature and characteristics of a “spirit”? We are at a distinct disadvantage when we try to define dogmatically the qualities of a class of being that we cannot see or experience apart from such a being’s self-disclosure. In other words, we must ultimately rely on scriptural data to determine what a spirit is or is not. That includes Scripture’s own descriptions of spirit beings, as well as its record of what those who have seen such a being have seen. So what do we know for certain?

---

<sup>9</sup> Oliphint, 123; Frame, 152, 367.

<sup>10</sup> Vern Poythress, “Rethinking Accommodation in Revelation,” WTJ 76 (2014): 150.

<sup>11</sup> Nor do we want to be guilty of chronological snobbery—to say nothing of linguistic ignorance—by suggesting that ancient Hebrews needed concrete language because they were incapable of abstract thought.

2.2.1. The problem of limited knowledge

We know that spirits are non-corporeal—that is, they do not inherently possess physical or material substance (though they can apparently assume physical form temporarily for the purpose of self-revelation; e.g., Gen 18:1ff; 32:24ff.). A spirit clearly possesses the same capacities (sight, knowledge, memory, voice, movement) of which our material body parts—including the mind itself—are the physical extension and expression.<sup>12</sup> Yet, because of our own physical and epistemological limitations, how would we know whether a spirit does not have spiritual “form”?

Arguments for anthropomorphism correctly deny that God has physical or material body parts (though, again, as the Creator of matter he can incorporate materiality into his self-revelations when he chooses). In my experience with the literature, it is specifically the issue of materiality that explanations of anthropomorphism emphasize.<sup>13</sup> Beyond immateriality, however, how do we know what a spirit has or has not?

2.2.2. The difference between literal and physical.

One problem in the literature, in my opinion, is the common confusion of literal with physical, as though they are identical or synonymous. We correctly affirm that God is not a physical being (i.e., material) but he is a literal being (i.e., real, actual, not figurative or metaphorical or imaginary). Angels, fallen and unfallen, are literal and yet not physical beings. Is it possible that while God as spirit certainly has no physical hand or arm or mouth or eyes, that he may, nonetheless, have hands and arms and mouth and eyes—in short, the sorts “features” that he keeps representing himself as possessing throughout Scripture?<sup>14</sup> And if not, how would we know? It seems worth noting that while God expressly denies his physicality, he never denies possession of form or features; in other words, a strict anthropomorphism does not emerge from explicit biblical theological data but rests exclusively on philosophical assumptions about what a spirit can and cannot be like.

2.2.3. The question of form

Herman Bavinck argues on the basis of Deuteronomy 4:12, 15<sup>15</sup> that God has no form.<sup>16</sup> John Frame counters, however, that the passage “does not say that God is without form; it only says that

---

<sup>12</sup> We clarify that “the arm of God” is an anthropomorphism because God has no arms. Yet in my admittedly limited experience most Christians intuitively shy away from asserting with equal certainty that the “mouth of the Lord” or “the eyes of the Lord” or “the face of God” are pure anthropomorphisms—that God is, shall we say, entirely faceless.

<sup>13</sup> Explanations of the Westminster Confession of Faith (WCF) statement that God is “without body, parts” regularly conflate the two words (from “body, parts” to “bodily parts”), seemingly to underscore that the point is immateriality. E.g., A. A. Hodge explains, “God is a free personal Spirit, without bodily parts or passions” and “We deny that the properties of matter, such as bodily parts and passions, belong to him” (The Westminster Confession: A Commentary [Carlisle: Banner of Truth, 2004], loc. cit.).

<sup>14</sup> The eternally incarnate Second Person of the Godhead is a different matter, and yet not entirely irrelevant to the discussion. Clearly there is no inherent contradiction between even physicality and deity, eternity, omnipresence, immutability, aseity, or any other divine attribute; Christ retains every attribute of deity even in conjunction with his incarnate physicality. So there can be no philosophical incongruity even between outright materiality and deity.

<sup>15</sup> And the LORD spoke to you out of the midst of the fire. You heard the sound of the words, but saw no form; you only heard a voice. . . . Take careful heed to yourselves, for you saw no form when the LORD spoke to you at Horeb out of the midst of the fire.

<sup>16</sup> Bavinck, The Doctrine of God (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1951), 175. This is the proof text cited in the WCF for the phrase “without body, parts,” along with John 4:24 and Luke 24:39 (which is addressed below).

God did not display his form to Israel on Mount Sinai.”<sup>17</sup> God revealed no form on that occasion for a very specific reason that he explains in 4:15-18:<sup>18</sup> he did not want them reducing his infinite glory to any limited, inadequate, and therefore inaccurate physical representation of any kind.<sup>19</sup> He transcends all such representations. And yet Genesis confirms that we ourselves are living, breathing, physical “images” of the true God. Frame is, in my estimation, correct on Deuteronomy 4.

Moreover, God actually does reveal “form” on most other occasions.<sup>20</sup> For instance, why should Exodus 24:10 specify that when Moses and the elders “saw God,” they saw a pavement of sapphire “under his feet”? We need no reference to “feet” to help us understand what is going on. Why not just “under him”? We are given no further description of exactly what they saw, except that they were seeing and worshiping him from a distance (24:1; cf. v. 12)—as if that’s as high as their gaze ventured or was able to see; but the fact of his literal presence is undeniable.

Numbers 12:8 is even more explicit. Moses alone actually saw the form (temunah)<sup>21</sup> of God—in what is certainly a reference to Exodus 34—where (as God himself describes it) God covered Moses with his hand while he passed by (Exo 33:22) so that Moses could see only his back (Exo 33:23), because (God explains) no living human could see his face and live (Exo 33:20).

Ezekiel 1:26-27 states that the prophet’s vision included “the likeness of a throne” and “on the likeness [דְמוּת] of the throne was a likeness with the appearance [מְרֹאֵה] of a man high above it”; the description includes “the appearance of his waist and upward” and “the appearance of his waist and downward.” He concludes, “This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord” (1:28). The term (“appearance”) denotes what it looked like. Block explains, “What Ezekiel sees is not an actual representation but a reflection of deity.”<sup>22</sup> Again, my question is, what exactly does that mean and how do we know?<sup>23</sup>

To affirm that God is spirit does not necessarily require denying that he possesses the form or features that his self-revelation regularly attributes to him. It necessitates denying the corporeality

---

<sup>17</sup> Frame, 589.

<sup>18</sup> Take careful heed to yourselves, for you saw no form when the LORD spoke to you at Horeb out of the midst of the fire, lest you act corruptly and make for yourselves a carved image in the form of any figure: the likeness of male or female, the likeness of any animal that is on the earth or the likeness of any winged bird that flies in the air, the likeness of anything that creeps on the ground or the likeness of any fish that is in the water beneath the earth.

<sup>19</sup> Frame adds that God “intends to assert his exclusive right to make images of himself” (589).

<sup>20</sup> Cf. “you saw no form” with the pre-incarnate Son “being in the form of God” (Phil 2:6). Owen says that God’s only “form” is his essence; yet spirits clearly can have what we call recognizable “form”—they are never depicted in Scripture as merely amorphous “presences.”

<sup>21</sup> Temunah occurs about 10 times (5x in Deu 4-5); the Israelites are commanded to make no likeness/form of God or anything else for worship (Ex 20:4); that command is justified by the assertion that at Sinai the Israelites heard God and saw physical manifestations of His presence but did not see any similitude or form on which to base any depiction or image of God for worship (Deu 4:12, 15, 16). In a probable reference to awaking from death, the psalmist exults in the notion that he will be satisfied, in the resurrection, with God’s form (Ps 17:5). NET thinks it “unlikely that the psalmist had such a highly developed personal eschatology”; but Job clearly did (Job 19).

<sup>22</sup> Daniel Block, The Book of Ezekiel (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997), I:108.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Ezek. 8:2, “he stretched forth the form [תְּבִיטָה] of a hand and took me by a lock of my hair.” The same term is used to signify a blueprint (Exo 25:9, 40), or a representative (Ezek 8:10, of “every form of creeping thing”), or an appearance (Ezek 10:8, of cherubim possessing “the form of a man’s hand under their wings”).

of these features; but to suggest that God has arms or eyes or a mouth is not to suggest that he has physical arms or eyes or mouth; literal reality is not defined by physicality.

To the objection that any sort of spiritual “form” or “features” necessarily entails limitations to deity, I would offer two observations. (1) We could argue that point on a philosophical level, but part of my larger point is that we simply don’t know enough about the metaphysics of spirit to opine with any epistemological authority. But more directly and importantly, (2) the objection must explain how the now eternally incarnate Second Person of the Godhead can have physical form and features and body parts without any limitation to his possession and exercise of all the attributes of deity. If there is no inherent contradiction between even physical form and illimitable divine attributes, there can be no inherent contradiction between spiritual form and illimitable divine attributes.<sup>24</sup>

2.2.4. The implications of Christ’s testimony regarding spirits

When Christ appeared to the disciples after the resurrection, they thought he was a spirit (Luke 24:37)—even though he clearly had arms and legs and eyes and a mouth. In other words, they saw no contradiction in a “spirit” having those features; they clearly expected a spirit to look like a “disembodied” person—a spirit person rather than a material person. Moreover, when Jesus corrected their misconception, he did not say, “How could I be a spirit? A spirit does not have arms or legs as you see I have”; rather, he said, “A spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have” (Luke 24:39). Jesus’ argument implies that what is specifically contradictory to “spirit” is materiality/physicality.

Jesus’ revelation about Lazarus and the plutocrat opens a brief window onto the afterlife. The rich man in hades requests that Lazarus—presumably a spirit without a resurrection body—be permitted to “dip his finger in water” to ease the rich man’s thirst (Luke 16:24). Angels, too, are defined as spirit beings, yet they are routinely described as having shape, form, and features, and not just when they interact directly with humans. Are these also anthropomorphisms? Or is it possible that angelic spirits have non-physical yet literal form?<sup>25</sup>

2.2.5. Tentative observations

To be clear, I am not arguing that God has “bodily parts”; he is spirit and therefore not in any sense corporeal (though, again, the same cannot be said of the Second Person of the Godhead). I am also not arguing that God has “body parts,” or that he must have the “features” regularly attributed to him in Scripture. I am suggesting that (1) there seems to be no biblical basis for asserting with such sublime self-assurance that God cannot have the literal yet non-physical form or features that he represents himself as having and which he nowhere denies possessing, and that (2) the presumed proof to the contrary, based on the fact that God is spirit, is rooted in two fundamentally flawed assumptions: (a) that literal necessarily implies physical, and (b) that our philosophical understanding of what a spirit can and cannot possess or “look” like is definitive for interpreting <sup>24</sup> For a brief summary of the biblical arguments for the now-eternal incarnate existence of Christ, see Wayne Grudem, Systematic Theology (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1994), 542-43. Cf. also WCF, 8:2.

---

<sup>25</sup> This may suggest another objection: what about zoomorphisms? First, unlike anthropomorphisms, they are extremely rare; I am aware of three or possibly four references to God’s “wings” (Ps 91:4; Jer 49:22; Mal 4:2; possibly Jer 48:20). Second, God consistently and overwhelmingly presents himself as a person, not an animal; and we are made in his image. Those factors justify, in my view, taking zoomorphisms as exclusively and purely metaphorical.

the biblical record. The only ground we have for asserting what a spirit is or is not like is the Scripture's record of God's self-disclosure and of human experiences with spirits.

It strikes me as mildly presumptuous (despite the best of intentions) to categorically insist that we understand God better than he describes himself, and to devise philosophical explanations for insisting that he doesn't really have what he keeps saying he has. The issue raises a question that reverses our anthropocentric perspective and allows us to peer for a moment through the opposite end of the telescope, so to speak: are all references to God's human-like form anthropomorphisms, or are we merely limited, humanized, physicalized theomorphisms? As Vern Poythress observes,

... God made man in the image of God. Man is theomorphic (in the "morph" or "form" of God). In a sense the word anthropomorphic has the order exactly backwards. God is the original and human beings are the derivative.<sup>26</sup>

The hermeneutic of anthropomorphism argues that God describes himself like us. The doctrine of creation teaches that God made us like himself.

3. ANTHROPOPATHISM AS A CATEGORY OF THEOLOGICAL EXPLANATION

Anthropomorphism finds fairly uniform agreement, both in terms of what is said as well as what is rarely addressed. But once you step into the realm of anthropopathism the debate becomes not only more vocal but also more internecine. Scott Oliphint asserts that "the 'consistent view' of the Reformed has been that those passages which speak of God's affections do so 'metaphorically,' or 'improperly,' or 'anthropopathically.'"<sup>27</sup> A survey of the literature, however, suggests less consistency than Oliphint's analysis seems to imply.

Augustine said, "Thou lovest without passion; . . . Thou art angry without emotion."<sup>28</sup> Anselm similarly wrote, "Thou art compassionate in terms of our experience, and not compassionate in terms of Thy being. . . . we experience the effect of compassion, but Thou dost not experience the feeling."<sup>29</sup> Renowned theologian Stephen Charnock wrote that "those expressions of joy, and grief, and repentance" attributed to God in the Scriptures "signify . . . that if God were capable of our passions, he would discover himself in such cases as we do."<sup>30</sup>

There seems to be no modern consensus, however, even among Reformed theologians on the issue of anthropopathism and, specifically, impassibility.<sup>31</sup> Some apply anthropopathism only to

---

<sup>26</sup> Vern Poythress, Theophany: A Biblical Theology of God's Appearing [Wheaton: Crossway, 2018], 121-22. Poythress himself actually credits this observation to J. I. Packer. Frame, too, makes a similar remark (Doctrine of God, 368).

<sup>27</sup> God with Us, 211.

<sup>28</sup> The Confessions of St. Augustine, Book I, Ch. IV.

<sup>29</sup> Proslogium, Ch. 8.

<sup>30</sup> Discourses upon the Existence and Attributes of God (New York: R.T. Carter & Brother, 1874), 342. Put more colloquially, the Bible's emotional depictions of God (on this view) amount to "what-God-would-feel-if-only-he-could-feel-like-us-but-he-can't-so-he-doesn't." It's unclear how such a view is deemed helpful in understanding God.

<sup>31</sup> The definition of impassibility depends on whom you ask. In Aristotelian thought, impassibility describes God as impervious to and unaffected by anything that happens in the world. In essence, it is emotional immutability; God is "unmoved" not only in absolute ontological terms (the unmoved Mover) but in emotional terms as well. Some theologians defend impassibility by clarifying it in one way or another (Oliphint, 86-87; J. I. Packer, "God," New Dictionary of Theology, certain “problem” passions such as jealousy, repentance, or grief.<sup>32</sup> For others, however, that does not go far enough. Recently Kevin DeYoung sided with Charnock’s view and lamented,

Some theologians, theologians we respect, theologians with the best of intentions, sometimes look for ways to tweak this classic understanding of immutability; and the impetus is to find a way to make God more relatable, to seem more involved, more engaged, more relational with his creatures.<sup>33</sup>

Sometimes, however, the impetus has nothing to do with wanting a different kind of God but with simply wanting to bring one’s theological description of God more in line with what God says of himself in his own self-revelation. DeYoung proceeds to quote Nicholas Wolterstorff:

Once you pull on the thread of impassibility, a lot of other threads come along with it. Aseity, for example. . . . One also has to give up on immutability and eternity. If God really responds, God is not metaphysically immutable and, if not metaphysically immutable, not eternal.<sup>34</sup>

Wolterstorff argues—and DeYoung agrees—that the classic statement of impassibility cannot be abandoned without ultimately undermining aseity, immutability, and even eternity. John Frame, however, argues to the contrary: “God’s suffering love in Christ . . . does not cast doubt upon his aseity and unchangeability”<sup>35</sup>—let alone his eternity.

Who, then, are we to believe? Is anthropathism the best explanation for all of God’s emotional self-descriptions? Is it even a legitimate theological/hermeneutical phenomenon? Does God actually experience the kinds of emotions that he himself describes in Scripture? Or are such expressions purely metaphorical because an immutable God cannot experience genuine emotion or be in any way actually affected by events outside himself without compromising his immutability, self-sufficiency, and even eternity? Full-bore anthropathism would seem to be the logical concomitant of full-bore anthropomorphism. Yet many—including even some very Reformed theologians—are not prepared to subscribe to full-fledged anthropathism.

In his dispute with the Socinians, John Owen denied that there are “affections and passions in God, as anger, fury, zeal, wrath, love, hatred, mercy, grace, jealousy, repentance, grief, joy, fear.”<sup>36</sup> After ed. Sinclair Ferguson, David Wright, J. I. Packer [Downers Grove: InterVarsity Press, 1988], 277), while others disavow impassibility entirely (see references to Grudem, Reymond, and Feinberg below).

---

<sup>32</sup> Hodge explains that when Scripture speaks of God’s “repenting, of his being grieved, or jealous, they use metaphorical language . . . , teaching us that he acts toward us as man would when agitated by such passions” (ibid.; he makes the identical statement in his Outlines of Theology). Yet he speaks of God’s wrath, or love, or compassion in quite a different category, not metaphorically but as literal realities to be taken at face value.

<sup>33</sup> Kevin DeYoung, “The God Who Is Not Like Us: Why We Need the Doctrine of Divine Immutability.” Together for the Gospel, 2018. <http://t4g.org/media/2018/04/god-not-like-us-need-doctrine-divine-immutability/>. DeYoung went on to cite Charnock as an example of the correct view of divine impassibility.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid.

<sup>35</sup> Doctrine of God, 616.

<sup>36</sup> Oliphint, 212. Frame, both citing and concurring with D. A. Carson, attributes the notion that “emotions are unworthy of God” to the influence of Greek metaphysical thought; such views “are not biblical,” says Frame, and therefore affirming Owen's basic arguments, however, Oliphint offers a crucial qualification to the traditional view of impassibility:

Once God determines to condescend to his creation, that determination itself includes limiting characteristics and properties that God assumes. Because God determines to do this, all limiting characteristics are self-limiting, first of all. . . . He does not have to do this; he freely chooses to do it . . . .<sup>37</sup>

That seems like a discreet yet substantive modification of the more traditional Reformed expressions of the issue of divine emotion. J. I. Packer similarly qualifies impassibility to mean that no created beings can inflict pain, suffering and distress on him at their own will. In so far as God enters into any suffering and grief, it is by his own deliberate decision; he is never his creatures' hapless victim.<sup>38</sup>

Perhaps most helpfully, Jon Tal Murphree explains how we can reconcile the notions of impassibility and affectability. The secret is found in a two-word modifying phrase: without consent. God is impassible without consent to be affected, but He is affectable with consent. . . . Scripture depicts a God who has chosen to be affected by His subjects.<sup>39</sup>

In other words, an immutable part of God's immutability is his sovereign choice to be affected in the ways he says he is, and to change his posture, relations, and interactions in genuine response to human reactions in the ways he says he does.

Others are less optimistic about retaining the concept of impassibility at all. Wayne Grudem rejects it as plainly contrary to Scripture and erroneously defended in the Westminster Confession of Faith.<sup>40</sup> John Feinberg declares that "it is necessary to reject divine impassibility."<sup>41</sup> Robert Reymond also provisionally denies impassibility.<sup>42</sup>

---

"provide no basis for denying the existence of divine emotions" (Doctrine of God, 609-10). It seems to me that a rigid anthropomorphism (denying not only materiality but also form and features) might also be attributed to similar influences.

<sup>37</sup> Oliphint, 218, original emphasis.

<sup>38</sup> "God," 277, emphasis added. Packer argues that this is the "Christian mainstream" understanding of impassibility.

<sup>39</sup> Divine Paradoxes: A Finite View of an Infinite God (Camp Hill, PA: Christian Publications, 1998), 124. A Methodist theologian, Murphree was a longtime theology professor (now professor emeritus) at Toccoa Falls Bible College.

<sup>40</sup> Systematic Theology, 165-66. As to the WCF, Oliphint argues that historically a passion "in scholastic terminology is that which is causally dependent on an external acting agent, and it affects the subject intrinsically. So, when the Confession denotes God to be 'without passions,' what it is saying is that, however and whatever God 'feels,' he does so according to his own sovereign plan and not because he is dependent or because something independent of him caused him to re-act to something outside himself" (86-87). Perhaps he is correct; but that understanding certainly is not reflected in many Reformed explanations of impassibility based on WCF phraseology.

<sup>41</sup> No One Like Him, 277.

<sup>42</sup> "Thus whenever divine impassibility is interpreted to mean that God is impervious to human pain or incapable of empathizing with human grief it must be roundly denounced and rejected" Systematic Theology (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1998), 178-79.

Theologians need to be prepared to go fully but only as far as God's self-revelation compels. A genuinely biblical-theological approach to God's self-revelation must be prepared to affirm both what God has chosen to say and how he has chosen to say it. And as it happens, Scripture has a great deal to say about the emotional dimension of God.<sup>43</sup>

Carson raises the problem that absolute sovereignty and absolute omniscience creates for divine emotion. How can God genuinely respond emotively to what he both controls and foreknows?

It is no answer to espouse a form of impassibility that denies that God has an emotional life and that insists that all of the biblical evidence to the contrary is nothing more than anthropopathism. The price is too heavy. You may then rest in God's sovereignty but you can no longer rejoice in his love. You may rejoice only in a linguistic expression that is an accommodation of some reality of which we cannot conceive, couched in the anthropopathism of love. Give me a break. Paul did not pray that his readers might be able to grasp the height and depth and length and breadth of an anthropopathism and know this anthropopathism that surpasses knowledge (Eph. 3:14-21). . . .

Yet before we write off the impassibility of God, we must gratefully recognize what that doctrine is seeking to preserve. It is trying to ward off the kind of sentimentalizing views of the love of God and of other emotions in God . . . [that make him] superficially attractive because he appeals to our emotions . . . [but at a cost of making him] a finite God . . . gradually diminished and reduced from what he actually is. . . .

If God loves, it is because he chooses to love; if he suffers, it is because he chooses to suffer. God is impassible in the sense that he sustains no "passion," no emotion, that makes him vulnerable from the outside over which he has no control, or which he has not foreseen.<sup>44</sup>

I am completely committed to denying that God is ever at the "emotional mercy" of anyone or anything outside himself. But I grow suspicious when a theological explanation essentially argues, for apparently logical or philosophical reasons, that the Bible cannot really be saying what it repeatedly seems to be saying, unless there is some compelling scriptural statement or principle to back up such an argument.<sup>45</sup>

4. THESIS ON ANTHROPOMORPHISM, ANTHROPOPATHISM, AND IMPASSIBILITY

My thesis, then, is a simple and perhaps (at this point) underwhelming one. In view of the pervasive and ongoing impact of our fallenness, the intellectual and perspectival limitations of our humanity, and the necessarily partial nature of divine revelation, theologians should be less sanguine about their ability to explain with dogmatic confidence aspects and qualities of the character and being of God that are both experientially and revelationally beyond us.

---

<sup>43</sup> See Appendix 2.

<sup>44</sup> The Difficult Doctrine of the Love of God (Wheaton: Crossway, 2000), 58-60.

<sup>45</sup> I also find it difficult to maintain that the human capacity for emotion—which distinguishes us from all other creatures—not only is not part of our creation in the image of God, but has no actual correspondence in God whatsoever. That would seem to imply that humans have more self-expressive and relational capacity than the infinite God who made us.

This is a call not for theological agnosticism on these points, but for candor, modesty, and humility in our theological assertions about a being infinitely beyond our experience and comprehension. Probably no one has expressed this better than John Owen:

Notwithstanding all our confidence of high attainments, all our notions of God are but childish in respect of his infinite perfections. We lisp and babble, and say we know not what, for the most part, in our most accurate, as we think, conceptions and notions of God. We may love, honor, believe, and obey our Father; and therewith he accepts our childish thoughts, for they are but childish. We see but his back parts; we know but little of him. Hence is that promise wherewith we are so often supported and comforted in our distress, "We shall see him as he is," we shall see him "face to face". . . . The queen of Sheba had heard much of Solomon, and framed many great thoughts of his magnificence in her mind thereupon; but when she came and saw his glory, she was forced to confess that the one half of the truth had not been told her. We may suppose that we have here attained great knowledge, clear and high thoughts of God; but, alas! when he shall bring us into his presence we shall cry out, "We never knew him as he is; the thousandth part of his glory, and perfection, and blessedness, never entered into our hearts."<sup>46</sup>

To apply my thesis more specifically, then, I suggest that (1) anthropomorphism is a legitimate explanation only insofar as it specifies that God (Father and Spirit) has no material form or physical features, and that (2) anthropathism and impassibility can be useful categories only insofar as they specify that God experiences no sinful emotions and is subject to no change, reaction, or response outside his control or apart from his own consent to be affected.<sup>47</sup> Once we exceed these scripturally grounded qualifications, I think we mistake logical assumptions and philosophical speculations for logical necessities and theological certainties.

5. CONCLUSION REGARDING DIVINE REPENTANCE

A number of considerations that can help us navigate our way through the forest of seemingly contradictory scriptural statements about divine repentance have had to be relegated to Appendix 3. This presentation will conclude expeditiously by returning to the original question and offering a more biblical theological solution.

Does God repent or not? Yes and No. That is the only genuinely biblical answer to the question, because the Bible says both "yes he does" and "no he does not." The difference lies not the subjective dictates of a previously decided theology based on what makes sense to us, but in the objective implications of the context. Three conditions can be summarized as follows:

1. God never "repents" of any absolute and unconditional pronouncements; to do so would be to lie, like man does. God is always unfailingly true to his covenants and his words.<sup>48</sup>

---

<sup>46</sup> Temptation and Sin (Lafayette, IN: Sovereign Grace, 2001), 65. This is a published edition from Owen's larger work On the Mortification of Sin in Believers.

<sup>47</sup> "God is impassible in the sense that he cannot be manipulated, overwhelmed, or surprised into an emotional interaction that he does not desire to have or allow to happen. . . . God is impassioned, and he may be affected by his creatures, but as God he is so in ways that accord rather than conflict with his will to be so affected" (Rob Lister, God is Impassible and Impassioned: Toward a Theology of Divine Emotion [Wheaton: Crossway, 2013], 36).

<sup>48</sup> Openness theologian John Sanders posits that Genesis 2-3 recounts the first example of divine repentance, a "divine relenting from negative consequences in favor of mercy." God—not unlike an indulgent parent, it seems—simply

2. God may “repent” in the sense of altering his posture or disposition, or changing from his expressed intentions of conditional promised good or conditional warned judgment in response to (a) intercessory prayer or (b) a change in man’s posture toward God (Jer 18).
3. God does “repent” in the legitimately lexical sense of regret or grief over evil and its effects; that does not mean he “changes” his mind in the sense that he realizes that he made a bad decision, or wishes he hadn’t done something, or is surprised by the outcome, but simply that he responds genuinely and emotionally even to foreseen developments.

So, for example, the threats of God that express his hostile posture against sinners are neither empty words, nor are they necessarily irrevocable (unless he indicates otherwise, as he does on occasion, Jer. 7:16, 11:14, 14:11). God’s threats are warnings designed to produce a repentant and submissive response.<sup>49</sup> When they don’t, the threat is unfailingly fulfilled. But when they do, God may change his posture. “God’s relenting is his sovereign decision,” notes Frame. “His right to withdraw his announced judgment and blessings is part of his sovereignty.”<sup>50</sup> Again, part of God’s immutable character is to respond to human responses to his words and works (Jer. 18:7-10; Jer. 26:3, 12-13, 18-19).<sup>51</sup>

CONCLUSION

I will end with a sermon quotation, a biographical illustration, a biblical example, and a scriptural prayer. The sermon quotation comes from B. B. Warfield on Philippians 2:5-8.

Men tell us that God is, by very necessity of his nature, incapable of passion, incapable of being moved by inducement from without; that he dwells in holy calm and unchangeable blessedness, untouched by human sufferings or human sorrows forever . . . . Let us bless our God that it is not true. God can feel; God does love. . . . We have scriptural warrant for believing that . . . God has reached out loving arms and gathered to his bosom that forest of spears which otherwise had pierced ours. But is this not gross anthropomorphism? We are careless of names: it is the truth of God. And we decline to yield up the God of the Bible and the God of our hearts to any philosophical abstraction.<sup>52</sup> chose not to do what he solemnly said he would do. In a sense, Sanders argues, Satan was right and God was wrong. After all, they didn’t “die” that day, precisely because “when God faces the sin, he cannot bring himself to fulfill his threat” (The God Who Risks, 48). Rather than even considering the possibility that the concept of dying in Genesis 2:17 might be meaningfully informed by other Scripture (e.g., Eph. 2:1-3), Sanders chooses instead to throw the integrity of God and his words under the theological bus in favor of a personal preference for a different divine attribute more to his liking.

The biographical illustration comes from Humphrey Carpenter’s biography of J. R. R. Tolkien:

---

<sup>49</sup> My two favorite illustrations of this communicational phenomenon are the Har Fleur speech in Shakespeare’s Henry V and President Truman’s two ultimatums to Japan prior to dropping the atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

<sup>50</sup> Doctrine of God, 564.

<sup>51</sup> This consideration opens up a whole separate discussion of prophetic contingency. Based on Jer 18, some have erroneously argued that all prophecy that is not explicitly unconditional is implicitly contingent (Robert B. Chisholm Jr., “When Prophecy Appears to Fail, Check Your Hermeneutic,” JETS 53/3 (September 2010), 563-64; Derek Kidner, The Message of Jeremiah [Downers Grove: IVP, 1987], 76-77); but that is a subject for another symposium.

<sup>52</sup> “Imitating the Incarnation,” The Person and Work of Christ (Philadelphia: Presbyterian and Reformed, 1950), 570-71, emphasis added.

What [Tolkien] once wrote of prejudices held by C. S. Lewis could have been said of [Tolkien himself] in his old age: “He had several [prejudices], some ineradicable, being based on ignorance but impenetrable by information.” . . . It was not so much a matter of prejudice as the habit (and it is not an uncommon Oxford habit) of making dogmatic assertions about things of which he knew very little.<sup>53</sup>

That leads to the biblical example, for this “habit of making dogmatic assertions about things of which he knew very little” is precisely what Job, in the end, confessed and repented of:

You asked, “Who is this who hides counsel without knowledge?” Therefore I have uttered what I did not understand, things too wonderful for me which I did not know. Listen, please, and let me speak; You said, “I will question you, and you shall answer Me.” I have heard of You by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees You. Therefore I [recant] and repent in dust and ashes (Job 42:3-6 NKJ).

Finally, I like to think of Psalm 131:1 as a theologian’s prayer:

LORD, my heart is not proud, nor are my eyes lofty, nor do I strut in great matters or in things too wonderful for me.<sup>54</sup>

I can think of no more appropriately biblical posture for theologians (of all people) to cultivate when it comes to matters so clearly beyond our experience, knowledge, and comprehension.

---

<sup>53</sup> Tolkien: A Biography (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1977), 235-36, emphasis added.

<sup>54</sup> My translation. I have used the word “strut” to translate the common Hebrew verb meaning “to walk” [הלכ] because there are, of course, many different kinds of walking governed by the implications of the surrounding context.

APPENDIX 1 THE MEANING OF נָחַם

- The root appears in names such as Nahum, Nehemiah, Menahem
- The root seems to mean to breathe deeply, to sigh, suggesting “a physical display of one’s emotions—sorrow, compassion or comfort” (Kaiser, More Hard Sayings of the OT, 39-41).
- Translated as:
  - Niphal
    - Repent
    - Regret
    - Rue
    - Relent
    - Change (one’s mind) [posture, disposition, inclination]
    - Grieve
    - (Allow oneself to) Be sorry
    - Comfort or console oneself
  - Piel
    - Comfort or console another
  - Pual; Hithpael
    - (Allow oneself to) Be comforted or consoled
    - Scheme revenge; be avenged, satisfied
- Other significant uses of נָחַם:
  - Gen. 24:67—Isaac was comforted after his mother’s death
  - Gen. 50:21—Joseph comforted his brethren and spoke reassuringly to them
  - Ex. 13:17—“repenting” is not always a good thing
  - Ps. 23:4—thy rod and staff comfort me
  - Is. 40:1—Comfort ye my people
  - Ezek. 5:12-13—consoled, satisfied because of justice rendered

APPENDIX 2

The Emotional Capacity of God to Suffer with His People

The notion of divine suffering is one of the specific areas that the doctrine of impassibility is intended to guard against. And yet there are numerous passages that describe a dimension of God's emotional experience that may be identified as divine empathy. "This emotional empathy," notes Frame, "can be called 'suffering,' although that is perhaps a misleading term. There is no reason in these passages to suppose that God suffers injury or loss." Nevertheless, "God experiences grief and other negative emotions, not only in the incarnate Christ, but in his non-incarnate being as well."<sup>55</sup>

Judges 10:15-16 <sup>15</sup> And the children of Israel said to the LORD, "We have sinned! Do to us whatever seems best to You; only deliver us this day, we pray." <sup>16</sup> *So they put away the foreign gods from among them and served the LORD. And His soul could no longer endure the misery of Israel.

Isaiah 63:9 <sup>9</sup> In all their affliction He was afflicted, And the Angel of His Presence saved them; In His love and in His pity He redeemed them; And He bore them and carried them all the days of old.

- Kt., LXX, Syr. read "not afflicted"; but it is difficult to see how this reading makes sense in the context. It seems more likely to be a theologically motivated reading.
- "affliction" = anguish, distress, trouble
- E. J. Young comments: "This is one of the most remarkable verses in the prophecy and one of the most disputed.... In all their affliction, there was affliction to Him. The meaning is beautiful and filled with great comfort for God's people. Calvin says that in speaking this way God declares the incomparable love He has toward His people.... When affliction is directed against us and we must suffer for His sake, we may remember that He too is bearing that affliction and suffering."

Isaiah 15:1-5 <sup>1</sup>The burden against Moab. Because in the night Ar of Moab is laid waste and destroyed, Because in the night Kir of Moab is laid waste and destroyed, <sup>2</sup> He has gone up to the temple and Dibon, to the high places to weep. Moab will wail over Nebo and over Medeba; On all their heads will be baldness, and every beard cut off. <sup>3</sup> In their streets they will clothe themselves with sackcloth; On the tops of their houses and in their streets everyone will wail, weeping bitterly.... <sup>5</sup> My heart will cry out for Moab; His fugitives shall flee to Zoar, like a three-year-old heifer. For by the Ascent of Luhith they will go up with weeping; For in the way of Horonaim they will raise up a cry of destruction, ....

Isaiah 16:9-13 <sup>9</sup> Therefore I will bewail the vine of Sibmah, With the weeping of Jazer; I will drench you with my tears, O Heshbon and Elealeh; For battle cries have fallen over your summer fruits and your harvest. <sup>10</sup> Gladness is taken away, and joy from the plentiful field; In the vineyards there will be no singing, Nor will there be shouting; No treaders will tread out wine in the presses; I have made their shouting cease. <sup>11</sup> Therefore my heart shall resound like a harp for Moab, And my inner being for Kir Heres.... <sup>13</sup> This is the word which the LORD has spoken concerning Moab since that time.

---

<sup>55</sup> Doctrine of God, 612-13. Frame notes only a couple such passages. This appendix highlights many more.

Jeremiah confirms this divine response in the following passage.

Jeremiah 48:30-32 <sup>30</sup> "I know his wrath," says the LORD, "But it is not right; His lies have made nothing right. <sup>31</sup> Therefore I will wail for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; I will mourn for the men of Kir Heres. <sup>32</sup> O vine of Sibmah! I will weep for you with the weeping of Jazer. ...

Jeremiah 31:20 <sup>20</sup> *Is Ephraim My dear son? Is he a pleasant child? For though I spoke against him, I earnestly remember him still; Therefore My heart yearns for him; I will surely have mercy on him, says the LORD.

Ezekiel 6:9 <sup>9</sup> "Then those of you who escape will remember Me among the nations where they are carried captive, because I was crushed by their adulterous heart which has departed from Me, and by their eyes which play the harlot after their idols; they will loathe themselves for the evils which they committed in all their abominations.

Ezekiel 21:16-17 <sup>16</sup> *"Swords at the ready! Thrust right! Set your blade! Thrust left -- Wherever your edge is ordered! <sup>17</sup> "I also will beat My fists together, And I will cause My fury to rest; I, the LORD, have spoken."

Ezekiel 22:12-13 <sup>12</sup> "In you they take bribes to shed blood; you take usury and increase; you have made profit from your neighbors by extortion, and have forgotten Me," says the Lord GOD. <sup>13</sup> "Behold, therefore, I beat My fists at the dishonest profit which you have made, and at the bloodshed which has been in your midst.

Hosea 11:7-11 <sup>7</sup> My people are bent on backsliding from Me. Though they call to the Most High, none at all exalt Him. <sup>8</sup> How can I give you up, Ephraim? How can I hand you over, Israel? How can I make you like Admah? How can I set you like Zeboiim? My heart churns within Me; My sympathy is stirred. <sup>9</sup> I will not execute the fierceness of My anger; I will not again destroy Ephraim. For I am God, and not man, the Holy One in your midst; and I will not come with terror. <sup>10</sup> They shall walk after the LORD. He will roar like a lion. When He roars, then His sons shall come trembling from the west; <sup>11</sup> they shall come trembling like a bird from Egypt, like a dove from the land of Assyria. And I will let them dwell in their houses," says the LORD.

Isaiah 53:3-5 <sup>3</sup> He is despised and rejected by men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and we hid, as it were, our faces from Him; He was despised, and we did not esteem Him. <sup>4</sup> Surely He has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; Yet we esteemed Him stricken, Smitten by God, and afflicted. <sup>5</sup> But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; The chastisement for our peace was upon Him, And by His stripes we are healed.

This final passage raises the incarnational factor in the discussion of God's impassibility. Despite systematic theological arguments for divine impassibility, it seems difficult to circumvent the following conclusion, each point of which has independent Scriptural corroboration:

1. Christ suffered
2. Christ was fully God and fully man, united in one indivisible person
3. Therefore, God is capable of suffering

Two points need to be made here. First, the doctrine of the hypostatic union prohibits us from isolating this emotional capacity as an expression of Christ's human nature only. The objection may be raised: "What about Christ's capacity to die? Must not that experience be isolated as a capacity of his human nature only? Does Christ's capacity to die mean that God is capable of dying?" If by "die" one means experiencing bodily death, that is by definition a capacity exclusively limited to human nature (since God has no corporeality). If, however, by "die" one means ceasing to exist or even ceasing conscious existence, even humans do not "die" in that sense. Christ is certainly not excluded from his own promise that "he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" So the fact that Christ died does not mean that God, as God, is capable of dying.

Second, the doctrine of the Trinity prohibits us from isolating such emotional capacities to the Second Member of the Godhead only (cf. the capacity of the Holy Spirit to be "grieved"). It is also difficult to circumvent the idea that God is capable of suffering if we are willing to accord God the positive emotional activities of compassion, joy, love, and delight. For example,

Isaiah 62:4-5 <sup>4</sup> *You shall no longer be termed Forsaken, Nor shall your land any more be termed Desolate; But you shall be called Hephzibah, and your land Beulah; For the LORD delights in you, And your land shall be married. <sup>5</sup> For as a young man marries a virgin, So shall your sons marry you; And as the bridegroom rejoices over the bride, So shall your God rejoice over you.

Finally, Christ is the ultimate, visible, incarnate expression of the divine capacity to suffer and feel with (com - passion) his people in their sufferings (cf. Heb. 4:15).

APPENDIX 3
CONSIDERATIONS FOR ARRIVING AT A SCRIPTURALLY INFORMED CONCLUSION
REGARDING DIVINE REPENTANCE

Let's look a little more closely at the major "problem texts"—Numbers 23:19 and 1 Samuel 15:29.

(1) Context is crucial.

Numbers 23:19 is uttered by Balaam in his second prophetic pronouncement regarding Israel. Balaam was hired by Balak, king of Moab, to curse Israel. Insisting he could only utter whatever God put into his mouth, Balaam agreed and Balak conceded. When Balaam opened his mouth pronouncing God's blessing on Israel (Num 23:1-10), Balak—frustrated and displeased—moved Balaam to another vantage point, hoping to elicit a different pronouncement (23:11-14; Balak's third try in 23:27-28 clarifies Balak's thinking—"perhaps it will please God that thou mayest curse them for me from there"). It is in this context that Balaam utters the assertion of 23:19: "God is not a man that He should lie; neither the son of man that He should repent. Has He said, and will He not do it? Or has He spoken, and will He not make it good?" In other words, God is not fickle. Once God has committed himself by stating his intentions, a change of location or vantage point is not going to make him change his mind or go back on what he said.

1 Samuel 15:29 involves precisely the same sort of context; God had issued an explicit charge and warned of the consequences of disobedience (1 Sam 12). Now that Saul had not only broken that charge but also failed to own his sin and repent sincerely, God is not about to go back on his word.

(2) Note the explicit contrasts and parallels in the texts.

- Numbers 23:19

"God is not a man, that He should lie, nor a son of man, that He should repent. Has He said, and will He not do it? Or has He spoken, and will He not make it good?"

- Contrast— God ≠ man (vacillating, shifting, capricious, manipulatable, bribeable)
- Parallel— Lying = Repenting.
- Context—"Repenting" in this context would be changing from the unconditional purposes he already said he would fulfill for Israel. For God to do otherwise now (or to expect that God would utter otherwise from a different vantage point, as Balak hoped) would be nothing short of lying. Notice the concluding elaboration to this effect: "Has He said (it), and will He not do it? Or has He spoken (it), and will He not make it good? Behold I have received a commandment to bless; and he has blessed, and I cannot reverse it." You cannot manipulate the true God—as you can a man or a pagan god—in order to make him do anything other than what he has already spoken. God's irreversible commitment to a previously stated and unconditional purpose is crucial here.

- 1 Samuel 15:29

"And also the Strength of Israel will not lie nor relent. For He is not a man that He should relent."

- Contrast—God ≠ man
- Parallel—Lying = repenting
- Context—God had anointed Saul as King with a strict charge and warning of what would happen should he fail. He failed—and would not genuinely repent. Consequently, the warned consequences are set in motion when God announces through Samuel, “Because you have rejected the word of the Lord, he has also rejected you from being king” (15:23). Saul pleads for some reprieve (15:24-25). Samuel reiterates exactly the same sentence (15:26) and as he turns to leave, Saul in desperation for some change in the pronouncement grabs Samuel’s mantle and accidentally tears it (15:27). That becomes a prophetic picture for Samuel’s third pronouncement (15:28), and his utterance of the assurance that what God has spoken will not be altered—he is not like a man who can be manipulated by self-concerned pleadings to change what he has purposed, uttered, and thus committed himself to do; to do so, especially with no meaningful change on Saul’s part, would be to forfeit his integrity (15:29).

(3) *The point of other “non-repentance” passages.

The rest of the “non-repentance” passages listed under the “Or not” category in the chart (besides Num 23:19 and 1 Sam 15:29) are not categorical assertions that God does not repent, but specific historic pronouncements of which He did not repent, or prophetic pronouncements of which He would not repent.

(4) *God does respond emotionally to human actions.

God’s capacity to grieve in response to our changing circumstances is an element of his infinite personality, in the image of which we are finitely fashioned. We might choose a certain course of action and even say, “I know I’m going to regret this”; and sure enough, sometimes we do. That does not necessarily mean we shouldn’t have done it or that it was a bad decision at the time. We just came to regret the way it worked out—even if we suspected the possibility ahead of time.

Similarly, God knew the sin and sorrow that would enter the world when he created man. That does not mean he wished he had never created, or that it was a bad decision, or that he was unpleasantly “surprised” by the outcome. It is part of God’s real reaction to developing circumstances, even when they’re foreknown. The same is true with his reaction to Saul in 1 Samuel 15.

(5) *God does respond to prayer. (See *references in chart.)

If God is omniscient, then he already knows what he will end up doing; so how can that honestly be called “changing his mind”? But if God is not only omniscient but also immutable (unchangeable) in his character, purposes, and pronouncements, then how can he meaningfully respond to prayer? Because part of his immutable character is his mercy and grace and self-professed responsiveness to man.

Note God’s response to Abraham’s prayer regarding his purpose for Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 18). But note God’s assurance to Ezekiel that even the intercession of Noah, Job and Daniel could not deter his decision to judge Judah (Ezek 14:14, 20, even though “repent” is not used).

(6) *God does respond to human responses. (See **references in chart.)

God never changes his character. Part of his character is his reliability and faithfulness to his Word. Part of his character—according to his self-revelation in the Bible—is also to change his posture and actions when people change theirs toward him.

This is not a mere anthropomorphism—we were aliens from God under his wrath; now we are accepted in the Beloved. That represents an actual change in God’s posture and action toward us. God pronounces judgment on the sinner, but when the sinner repents of his sin, God repents of his judgment—without ever changing his character or renouncing his word. That’s easy for us to understand because the condition is built in to the gospel. God sent Jonah to Nineveh with an apparently unqualified warning (“Yet 40 days and Nineveh will be destroyed”), yet when they repented, so did God—something Jonah seemed to suspect all along, apparently because he knew God’s character, again demonstrating that God “repents” without ever changing his character or contradicting his word (Jonah 3:9,10; 4:2).

Similarly, God may promise blessing on obedience to his word, but when someone like Saul “rejects the word of the Lord” the promised blessings are forfeited—and the Lord may be said both to regret or grieve over man’s actions, and to “change his posture” regarding the setting up of Saul. God appointed Saul to reign in response to the demand of the people—a concession the consequences of which (though its results were foreseen) now grieved God. And whereas he would have blessed Saul with an endless dynasty (13:13) those bona fide (good faith) intentions have also been forfeited.

Obviously there is an element of mystery because we are finite representations of an infinite God with limited capacities of the perfections of His personality. God clearly has an emotional capacity (he loves and hates, may be grieved or joyful)—which doesn’t seem to fit because most of our emotions are by nature reactionary to largely unexpected events. With God there are no unexpected events. When we “repent” in the sense of changing our minds it is often due to the unanticipated development of circumstances or the reception of new information—both of which are impossible for God.

By way of illustration, we can watch a movie we have seen before—even several times—so that the events and outcome are not surprising to us, and yet still laugh or cry as we watch the familiar events unfold. Or we may watch a videotape of a ballgame whose final score we already know and display genuine emotional involvement and expression of events we already “foreknow.”

SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Baines, Ronald S. and Richard C. Barcellos. Confessing the Impassible God: The Biblical, Classical, & Confessional Doctrine of Divine Impassibility. Palmdale, CA: RBAP, 2015.
- Bavinck, Herman. The Doctrine of God. Grand Rapids: Baker, 1951.
- Carson, D. A. The Difficult Doctrine of the Love of God. Wheaton: Crossway, 2000.
- Charnock, Stephen. Discourses upon the Existence and Attributes of God. New York: R.T. Carter & Brother, 1874.
- DeYoung, Kevin. "The God Who Is Not Like Us: Why We Need the Doctrine of Divine Immutability." Together for the Gospel, 2018. <http://t4g.org/media/2018/04/god-not-like-us-need-doctrine-divine-immutability/>
- Dolezal, James E. All That is in God: Evangelical Theology and the Challenge of Classical Christian Theism. Grand Rapids: Reformation Heritage Books, 2017.
- Edwards, Jonathan. The "Miscellanies." Vol. 13 of The Works of Jonathan Edwards. Edited by Thomas A. Schafer. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1994.
- Feinberg, John S. No One Like Him: The Doctrine of God. Foundations of Evangelical Theology. Wheaton: Crossway, 2001.
- Fiddes, Richard. Theologia Speculativa: or, The First Part of a Body of Divinity Under that Title. Wherein are explain'd the Principles of Natural and Reveal'd Religion. London: W. Bowyer, 1718.
- Frame, John. The Doctrine of God. Phillipsburg: P&R, 2002.
- Grenz, Stanley J. Theology for the Community of God. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000.
- Grudem, Wayne. Systematic Theology: An Introduction to Biblical Doctrine. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1994.
- Hodge, A. A. Outlines of Theology. Carlisle: Banner of Truth, 1972.
- _____. The Westminster Confession: A Commentary. Carlisle: Banner of Truth, 2004.
- Horton, Michael. The Christian Faith: A Systematic Theology for Pilgrims on the Way. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2011.
- Lister, Rob. God is Impassible and Impassioned: Toward a Theology of Divine Emotion. Wheaton: Crossway, 2013.
- Murphree, Jon Tal. Divine Paradoxes: A Finite View of an Infinite God—A Response to Process and Openness Theologies. Camp Hill, PA: Christian Publications, 1998.
- Oliphant, K. Scott. God with Us: Divine Condescension and the Attributes of God. Wheaton: Crossway, 2012.

Packer, J. I. "God." New Dictionary of Theology. Ed. Sinclair Ferguson, David Wright, J. I. Packer. Downers Grove: InterVarsity Press, 1988.

Poythress, Vern. "Rethinking Accommodation in Revelation," WTJ 76 (2014).

Renihan, Samuel. God without Passions: A Primer. Palmdale, CA: RBAP, 2015.

Reymond, Robert. Systematic Theology. Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1998.

Ware, Bruce. Their God Is Too Small: Open Theism and the Undermining of Confidence in God. Wheaton: Crossway, 2003.

Weinandy, Thomas G. Does God Suffer? Notre Dame: University of Notre Dame, 2000.